Some writers say that the wounded person lived as many days as the poison had been made. When the Spaniards first came to Carthagera they ate some of the Mancanillas above mentioned, and their experience is related in the following words: All those that did eat of them thought they should have burst, but they were relieved with oil; and they concluded from the violent reachings and pangs that they must infallibly have died, had it not been for the oil. This dreadful poison did much mischief till a remedy was found against it. Captain John G. Bourke, U. S. A., writing on the subject of poisoned arrows, said that he did not believe. in the virulence or rather the permanent virulence, of the poison made from the putrid liver of deer into which an enraged rattlesnake had injected...
