Excerpt: . future chapter to describe the general exodus. As the hut population diminished, occasions for special services were more rare, and though the closing services at each of the chapels were days to be remembered, they cannot well be called red letter days. At each chapel special closing services were held, though there were but few of the railway folk left to attend. A writer in the Home Mission Field of the Church of England, the organ of the Additional Curates Society which has so liberally furthered the objects of the Mission, after giving a short history of the work and describing the tunnel service, says--and his words shall conclude this chapter-- With this scene, too, might fitly end our brief sketch of this most interesting Mission; but perhaps a word or two should be added as to results. The question is often asked,...
