Out of this plan, however, but fresh trouble sprung, For, just as they were o er a bridge going, The Ass, who had no fancy for being so slung, Began so much inquietude showing, That they stopp d to unfetter his feet, but before They could him from his bonds quite deliver, He asunder the tackling so suddenly tore, That he fell and was drown d in the river. Well, my Boy, said the poor Man, as home they now went, The we will not with any one quarrel, We, methinks, may deduce from this hapless event The most useful and excellent moral: That, since do what one will one can...
