Often the dreamer fails of compensation, save the joy of his dream. Inventors are dreamers; novelists, poets, artists, all dream. Inventors fall short of success. The novelist dream has to be told in fitting words that it may seem real to the reader---and incidentally--find a publisher. The artist must be able to show his dream on canvas or in marble, or other material substance, else no one understands. The many pass by on the other side, not even seeing the dream when it materializes. Another class want to know, but having eyes see not. It is some of this class who cry Show me the dream and the interpretation thereof. The art critic, Lessing, could never have created the Laocoon, but he analyzed it and gave voice to its meaning. The ocean is no greater because of...
